Pedagogy of Hope: Reliving Pedagogy of the Oppressed ...

In these opening words Freire introduces the idea of a pedagogy of hope and why it is important. Freire ' s writing is an experiment in bringing out truth. Hope, he says, is an ontological need, an existential concrete imperative, which demands an anchoring in practice. Hope is necessary but not enough. Just to hope is to hope in vain. We need critical hope the way a fish needs unpolluted ...

In Britain and Ireland there is some hope that pedagogy can be rescued. That possibility rests largely on the extent to which social pedagogy and its associated forms become established – especially in social work and community learning and development. If this professional identity takes root, and academic training programmes follow, then there is a chance that a counter-culture will grow ...
